My dear President Falconer:

I am fixing up my schedule of engagements for the coming year, and I write to know whether it would be convenient for you to have the three lectures at the University delivered on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, February 10th, 11th and 12th. If these dates are convenient, I shall make my arrangements accordingly.

Sincerely yours,

President Robert W. Falconer,

My dear President Falconer:

I have yours of the 12th of September, and am glad that the dates I suggested are approved by you. I have accordingly entered them in my schedule. Your Professor Wrong has asked me to stay with him during the three days that I shall be in Toronto, and I have been very glad to accept his kind invitation. I shall not entail upon you again the very uncomfortable burden, that you had when I was there before, of arranging such engagements as I may have to make when in Toronto. I shall saddle them on to brother Wrong.

I look forward to seeing you and Mrs. Falconer again with great pleasure and to renewing our friendship. I shall probably take for my subject, "The Presidency of the United States, its Duties and its Responsibilities". I understood that the Foundation involved a discussion of something American in scope, and I think the comparison between the executive power in the United States and that in England and other countries, together with some personal reminiscences, may suggest enough for three lectures of interest to your students. I would like to have your judgment on that subject, however. Mr. Wrong was inclined to think that it would suit the audience.

Sincerely yours,

President Robert A. Falconer,
University of Toronto.

My dear President Falconer:

I have your letter of February 19th. I shall be very glad to assist you in the publication of the lectures by sending you a corrected copy. I do not expect to send the corrected copy to the University of Virginia until after my Spring vacation, which comes after Easter, and I shall send to you the copy at the same time.

Sincerely yours,
